DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Rice House is a two-story vernacular house with a gabled entry porch dating from the late 19th or early 20th century. It is located on the west side of Corns Lane, a short road leading south from Churchville Road (MD 22) just west of Churchville.

The gable roofed house has a symmetrical facade with two bays flanking the entrance. A single interior chimney is located on the west gable end. The window trim is plain and the windows are 1/1. Virtually the only architectural detail is the entry porch, which has a barrel vault under the gable roof. Its crude proportions and simple construction suggest unskilled carpentry.

The foundation is not visible above ground. The asbestos shingle exterior may cover the original siding which is probably clapboard. The roof is modern composition material.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Rice House may be a remnant of a 19th century black community which apparently developed within a short radius of the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church (HA-1267), located a short distance to the southeast. The simple form and construction of the house suggests that it was built by non-skilled workmen. The surrounding area remains a predominantly black neighborhood.
